SUBJECT: Compressor availability

We have been informed by one of our compressor manufacturers that certain older compressors are no longer available. Most of the units that are affected are in excess of 12 years old.

Careful consideration should be used when making the decision to replace a compressor of this age. Considering cost of labor, parts and unit efficiency, it may be a better decision to replace the unit. Newer ice makers typically use less water and power and will be more efficient than the older models.

If, the decision is made to replace the compressor and it is no longer available through Hoshizaki, you may be able to use the compressor manufacturer's model number to source an alternative compressor, at your local refrigeration supply house. The manufacturer's model number is printed on the compressor label and can also typically be found in the Tech Spec guide or the individual units Parts Manual. It will also be helpful to not only note the compressor model number but also record any other data present on the compressor nameplate to aid your wholesaler in sourcing a replacement compressor. Compressor manufacturers typically recommended replacing start components with a new compressor. The wholesaler will be able to provide the proper start components needed for the replacement compressor.

Below is a list of compressors that have recently become no longer available.
